Dying Without a Will in Montana— Who Gets Your Property?

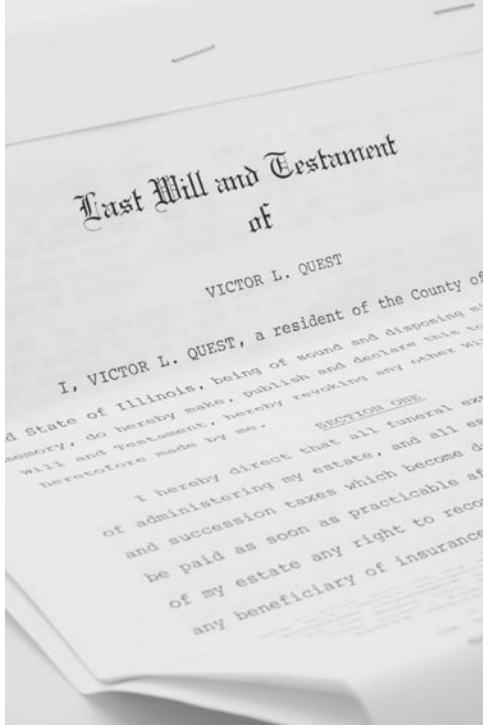

Do you know how your property would be distributed if you passed away without a written will? Do you realize that if you don't have a written will only your relatives receive your property? If you have no relatives the state of Montana gets all your assets.

The Montana State University Extension offers a variety of estate planning MontGuides designed to help families become better acquainted with some of the devices used in estate planning and to create an awareness of the need for such planning. In addition, MSU Extension now offers a new helpful Web site: Dying Without a Will in Montana at www.montana.edu/dyingwithoutawill/. By clicking “yes” or “no” to a variety of questions Montanans can learn how their property would be distributed if they pass away without writing a will.

The way Montana law provides for the distribution of property in the absence of a written will may be satisfactory in some instances. Would the Montana intestate statutes distribute property according to your wishes and your situation? If not, then you may want to consider having a written will drafted or make other provisions for transferring property after your death.

For more information on estate planning, visit www.montana.edu/extensionecon/estatplanningpublications.html or contact your local County or Reservation Extension Agent.
